Acknowledgements

I would like to express my thanks to my fellow co-ordinators across Europe. When I put the idea to them back in the autumn of 2001, they willingly joined in the project and have pursued it with ongoing enthusiasm and commitment, despite having to fit it around punitive schedules of other commitments. It has been a busy twelve months but a productive one. This has been a distinctively collaborative project, and I could not have wished for better partners. I am particularly grateful to Claire Tylee, who has lent her good judgment and her good humour, as well as her practical support, unfailingly. It has been a particular satisfaction to involve other colleagues, William Leahy and Deborah Philips, in the translations also, which makes it feel like a department enterprise.

We have all depended to some extent on the expertise of others, generously shared. In fact, a small army of people in many countries has enabled the project to come to fruition. As well as my co-translators Paola Marchionni and Emilia Ippolito, I wish to mention Debjani Chatterjee of Sheffield, John Barnie of Aberystwyth, the staff of Kala Sangam of Bradford, and Louise Hosking and Salwa Salib of the Al-Furqan Islamic Heritage Foundation of Wimbledon, who have all made a special contribution. I am sure each of the project's co-ordinators in the different countries has a similar list. We thank them all.

Above all it is to the writers whose work appears here that we are indebted. Without them there would be no project, and its merits derive from theirs. Our project should be seen as a commemoration of all those writers everywhere who are dedicated to writing in the language they love, without regard to whether it may bring them fame or fortune.

I would like to add a personal dedication of the project to Joyce Lorimer, whose teaching at Chelmsford County High School first gave me a love of languages, and to Caroline Pogson and Anup K. Sharma, surgeons of St. George's Hospital, Tooting, sine qua non.
